Homemakers Items

Interest in extra cash . . individually or in your club?

Miss Catherine Peery, rural arts specialist at VPI, says there are many factors to consider, such as the amount of time you have to give to a money-making project, individual skills, and marketing facilities.

Handmade articles are much in demand if certain standards are maintained. Miss Peery says the quality should be superior to similar objects found on local markets. The product, regardless of fine workmanship, should be something of present day use. For example, a fancy crochet table center piece is not used often today. However, crochet stoles, table mats, and other popular articles might be well received. Unusual toys, things to eat, and things to wear, are worth considering.

In making things for sale remember that each article should be indentical in quality regardless of the quantity. Once a market is established the volume should be great enough to supply the demand. Current prices of similar articles should be studied so the price of what you are offering will not be too high or too low. Packaging often sells an article, and ready-wrapped gifts for mailing will sometimes be a selling feature. Make one product well, and try to improve as you produce.

There are many people who would pay to have someone else do routine jobs. Make your own list. Many women earn extra cash by re-seating chairs, quilting, decorating for weddings or parties, patching and darning, making dried flower arrangements.

On "how to sell," Miss Peery has these suggestions:

Make up a few samples and visit local shops. Local places are often the best market because they have an interest and pride in home town products. Run attractive advertisements in the local paper. If you have a limited quantity of products, have open house sometime before Christmas. Mail announcements to folks you think would be interested. Or prepare an inexpensive leaflet describing the product to bring in mail orders. Bazaars and auctions are effective group - selling activities.

KNOW THE WEATHER

By E. H. Sims

Is there any standard form for government weather forecasts? Is it true that false forecasts sometimes dodge the issue of predicting the weather?

There is no standard form for weather forecasts, as printed in the nation's newspapers, which requires a guess on all of the points of interest to the average reader.

One day the forecast might mention winds, or on another day the forecast might skip the precipitation question, forecasting only clouds. These "hedges" usually mean the forecasters are uncertain about coming weather.

Critics claim the official forecasters should attempt to cover all points of interest in all forecasts, even if they are wrong. The idea is that they would be right more than wrong and this would be of some benefit.
